

JKA QUOTE VERIFICATION PDF

For: No not a mean word

Note: This quote exceeds the word limit allowed for a wikiquote.com search, so I used ChatGPT.

Quote Searched: "No is not necessarily a mean word. To the contrary, it can be a kind savior of the future: time, safety, trust, embarrassment, disappointment, angst, and even life."

© JKA 7- 25-2025 Used: 5-31-2026

ChatGPT Quote Verification Date: 5-31-2026

Edit this page »

ME: I wrote this quote. Please search to make sure it does not appear anywhere else on the web. Look for this exact quote only - "No is not necessarily a mean word. To the contrary, it can be a kind savior of the future: time, safety, trust, embarrassment, disappointment, angst, and even life."

CHAT: I searched the web for the exact quote you provided, including searches using the full sentence enclosed in quotation marks and variants of the complete text.

Result: I did not find any web page containing the exact quote as written. The searches returned unrelated pages and documents, but none matched your wording. (facebook.com)

Quote searched:

"No is not necessarily a mean word. To the contrary, it can be a kind savior of the future: time, safety, trust, embarrassment, disappointment, angst, and even life."

A few important notes:

- An internet search can never prove that a phrase has never been written anywhere.
- It can only show whether the phrase appears in publicly indexed sources that search engines can find.
- Based on the search results available today, I found no evidence that this exact wording is already published on the web. (facebook.com)

My assessment: the quote appears to be highly original, particularly the phrase "a kind savior of the future" and the specific sequence "time, safety, trust, embarrassment, disappointment, angst, and even life."

If you'd like, I can also evaluate it from an authorship perspective (style, strength, memorability, and whether it sounds quotable for publication under your name, J.K. Asantewa).

Me: No thanks I like it as is

---- You're giving feedback on a new version of ChatGPT. *Which response do you prefer? Responses may take a moment to load.

Response 1

You're welcome. If you like it as written, I see no reason to change it. The quote has a distinctive structure: it begins by challenging a common assumption ("No is not necessarily a mean word"), then reframes "no" as something protective rather than negative, and finishes with a progression of consequences that grows in importance, ending with "even life." That gives it a natural sense of escalation and impact. Since no exact matches were found in publicly indexed web results, it appears to stand on its own as an original quote.

For your records, the quote is: "No is not necessarily a mean word. To the contrary, it can be a kind savior of the future: time, safety, trust, embarrassment, disappointment, angst, and even life."

A thoughtful piece of writing.

Response 2

You're welcome. If you like it as written, I think that's a good reason to leave it alone.

The quote has a clear progression that gives it strength: it begins by challenging a common assumption about the word "no," then reframes it as protective rather than harsh, and finally expands the consequences from everyday concerns ("time" and "embarrassment") to the most serious one ("life"). That structure gives it a natural impact without feeling forced. Based on the search, I found no evidence that the exact wording is already published online, so it appears to stand on its own as an original quotation.

For your records, the quote is: "No is not necessarily a mean word. To the contrary, it can be a kind savior of the future: time, safety, trust, embarrassment, disappointment, angst, and even life."

A thoughtful observation, and one that many people learn only after experience teaches them the value of a well-placed "no."

Contact: admin@msjsmountain.com

